

Wildlife Farm Project

The Wildlife Farm is home to many orphaned and injured animals, offering care to young orphaned animals, as well as a haven for injured animals while they recover from their trauma. The farm is home to animals including elephants, lions, tigers, cheetahs, the spotted hyena, white lions, and hippo, as well as free-range game such as giraffes, wildebeest, zebras, warthogs, impalas, waterbucks, and the red hartebeest.

Some of the animals on the farm are wild and kept in separate enclosures as they are not able to be released into the wild. The farm acts as a home for many abused and neglected animals, as well as raising young animals that are rejected by their parents. The farm is unique in its design and activities.

The current aims of this project include reviving areas of damaged natural plant life, establishing viable populations of indigenous animals that were once poached, and restoring the general area to its original pristine condition. The area is part of a UNESCO World Heritage site and has a history dating back over 200 million years. It is their duty to protect and preserve this history; all volunteer assistance is greatly appreciated and targeted towards this cause.

Project Highlights

Volunteer tasks

All work carried out by the volunteers will have a direct positive impact on the conservation of the wildlife. Some of the ongoing projects that volunteers might be part of include, but are not limited to:

- Daily farm duties such as cleaning animal enclosures, feeding the animals and changing the water.
- Anti-poaching fence patrols – Daylight guided walks around the perimeter of the property to check for snares and mark areas of the fence which require fixing.
- Bush clearing and alien plant control. This involves the removal of plants that pose a threat to the natural fauna and flora found within the reserve.
- Road maintenance (Filling, scraping and levelling) and erosion control
- Animal life improvement project: volunteers can be a part of the improvement of the animal's lives. Whether it's doing day to day cleaning, feeding and watering, to painting the elephant house and building new enclosures. These projects change according to the needs of the animals and farm.
- Repairs Tiger pool and Lion enclosure upgrade
- Ecological grass survey and cutting of grass in enclosures, trimming trees
